WSIS AND BEYOND

The Tunis summit will formally conclude the four-year process of the World Summit on the Information Society (WSIS). Civil society organizations from all around the world have participated lively in this process, building networks and coalitions, formulating contributions for the negotiations, strategizing, and shaping their own visions of an Information Society that meets human needs. Now, the main challenge is to ascertain that the WSIS process, which proved to be instructive for all its participants, will generate a sustainable follow-up. For civil society, major WSIS controversies have revolved around human rights, sustainable development and multi-stakeholder participation, and these concepts also need to be the cornerstones of the WSIS follow-up. Pressing questions that need to be discussed are the following ones:

- What should a post-WSIS agenda look like in the different world regions?
- What strategic goals will help promote the triad of human rights, sustainable development and civil society participation in governance processes?
- What conclusions can be drawn from the civil society participation in the multi-stakeholder process of WSIS?
- Which arenas and perspectives open up for civil society involvement after WSIS?
- What programmatic goals can unite the different social movements and initiatives dedicated to freedom of communication, the safeguarding of the right to privacy, open access to knowledge, free and open source software etc.?

To promote the civil society debate of these questions and enable civil society to share views and discuss forward-looking questions and strategies, the Heinrich Böll Foundation is involved in organizing a number of side events at WSIS Tunis and will launch the publication "Visions in Process II – The World Summit on the Information Society, Geneva 2003-Tunis 2005."

These contributions are also part of the Citizens' Summit on the Information Society (CSIS), whose objectives the Heinrich Böll Foundation strongly supports.

ABOUT US

The Heinrich Böll Foundation is among the civil society organizations that have participated in the WSIS process right from the beginning and in close cooperation with partner organizations in several world regions. The Foundation has strengthened civil society participation in WSIS in numerous ways. Beyond WSIS, we will continue our engagement to further the networking and collaboration between civil society organizations in different regions and at the global level. Our aim is to help build a powerful social movement for freedoms of communication and information, which will contribute to the creation of a sustainable, global and inclusive knowledge society.
